Spontaneous Combustion. "That animal budies are liable to spontaneous combus ion," says Prof. Weissman, "is a fact which was will known to the accients. Many cases have been adduced as examples, which were no doubt merely cases of individ uals who were highly susceptible to strong clectrical excitation." A certain gentleman, known to the Professor, on a cold, keen winter night, retired to his chilly sleeping room. He had worn silk stockings over his woolen ones during the day. On undressing for bed, as he drew off his silk stockings, he heard a sharp, cracking noise, but paid no special attention to it. In the morning, on looking for his scookings, he found them consumed to ashes, without having set fire to the chair on which they were laid. Still more wonderful and awful is the as urance that the wife of Dr. Treilas, phy sician to the late Archbishop of Toleds, Spain, emitted is flammable perspiration of such a nature that when the ribbon she wore was taken from her and exposed to the cold air it instantly took fire, and flished with sparks of fire like a lively "Roman condle," And Prof. Hafmester, in the "Berlin Translations," 1875, records a case of the same nature respecting a pessent, whose linen took fire, whether it was laid up in a box, when wet or hung up in the open sir. A case of this kind recently occurred at the abactoir in Jersey City. During the recent spell of hot weather one of the workmen threw on his blue linen blouse, smoking with perspiration. It was hung up to the ice house. lo a few minutes it burst into a corruscation of sparks and literally consumed itself, Oue of the most remerkable cases of spontaueous combustion on record is that of the Congtess Cornelia Zingari and Bandi, of Cesens, Italy. The lady, who was in the sixty second year of her age, retired to bed in her usual health. Here she spent about three hours in familiar conversation with her maid and in saying her prayers, and, having at last fallen asloep, the door of her chamber was shut. As the maid was not summoned at the usual hour she went into the bedroom to summon her mistress, but, receiving no answer, she opened the window and saw the corpse on the floor in the most dreadful condition. At the distance of four feet from the bed there heap of ashes; part of the body was half burnt, the stockings remaining unicjured; most of the body was reduced to ashes. The air in the room was charged with flusting soot (animal carbon.) The bed was not it jured. From an examination of all the circumstanc sof the cas it was generally supposed that an internal com-bustion had taken place; that the lady had risen from her bed to cool herself, and that on the way to open the window the cumbastion had overpowered her and consumed her body by a process in which a flame was produced which could ignite the furniture on the floor.

PUNGENT AND PENETRATING. - There are mean men in this world, men who would rain another's chance of earning a livelihood just for a joke. Mr. Garters is a dealer in catarrh souff. which he peddles about in bex :s. The souff is a compound perfectly pleasant to take and very efficacious. The other day, Mr. Garters called upon Squire Ick, the lasger, who is very irascible, and is a great suff rer from catarrh. He urged Squire lak to try the souff, assured him that one application gave instant relief, and that it was so pleasant to take that one would never know that he had tried it. After reneated assurances on this last point, Squire I k consented to test the mixture, and Mr. Garters produced a box, and said: "Take a very large pinch." The box had been tampered with by some fiend who had filled it with red peper. Squire Ink obeyed; he took an enormous pinch of it then he sneez d It wasn't a single soccze, but a succession of awful "achoos" that seemed of sufficient violence to yank Squire lok's head off. Tears flowed from his eyes, and when he would check the thing for a moment, it was only that it might commence again with redoubled power. Garters was awfully shocked. He pat-ted Irk's back and said: "I never knew it to affect any one so before. I can take quantities of it. See her!" and then he went it "Autobaka-choo-cachoo-cachoo - cochoo - choo - choo !' and then the same thing over again.

and then the same thing over again.

There they both stood and sneezed until they had almost loosed their hair at the roots, and felt as though they had been through a threshing mechine. Equire Ink was the first to get able to speak: 'What the duce does this mean, sir?' he yelled. "I ca-cshoo—I—don't kno—co-chooooool' replied Garters "Don't kno w! I'll teach you to practice your infernal arts on me!" and he grabbed Garters and burled him from the window, and then seized the snuff, jumped out and forced Garters to inhale a lot more of it. Then he left the unhappy Garters, and three policemen who come along picked him up. But he sneez deo that they couldn't hold him, and when, after he had partly calmed down they got him into a drug store, he sneezed six bottles off a shelf, and the next day, when he was in bad at the hospital, he got a notice from Ink that he was sued for $60 000 damages
